About Colonial Williamsburg

Colonial Williamsburg is the largest outdoor living museum in the country, upholding our educational mission through immersive, authentic 18th-century experiences and programming for our guests. In 1926, the Reverend Dr. William Archer Rutherford Goodwin, with the financial backing of John D. Rockefeller Jr., began to restore Williamsburg to its original colonial state, starting with the purchase of the historic Ludwell-Paradise House. Today, Colonial Williamsburg's Historic Area houses restored and historically preserved buildings, 88 of which are originals.

From the historic area where you can discover government sites, family homes, and historic trades, to the art museums featuring the best in British and American fine and decorative arts, there are many things to do and learn during your visit to Colonial Williamsburg. 8:30 a.m. – 9:30 a.m. “Four Score and Seven Years Ago and Then Some: The Unyielding Attack on the Use of the Independent Contractor Model in the Transportation Industry”

On November 19, 1863, President Lincoln gave his most important speech, the famed Gettysburg Address. In that address, President Lincoln noted that we were “engaged in a great civil war” testing whether our nation would survive. No one can suggest that the battle surrounding the use of independent contractors in the transportation industry rises remotely to the level of importance of the survival of our then young nation. But this battle, and the never-ending attacks on the independent contractor model at the federal and state level, challenges many of our clients to the point of threatening the financial viability of some. This panel will address those challenges, inform attendees on the status of significant litigation, and provide regulatory and statutory updates relating to the use of independent contractors in transportation. This will include a discussion of FAAAA preemption and several strategies to mitigate risk, including the use of technology, third-party administrators, and alternative business models that we can advise our clients on to endure these harrowing times.

8:30 a.m. – 9:30 a.m. “The Digital Freight Revolution Is Happening—And It’s Not Throwing Away Its Shot”

Is it a revolution or a revelation that digital freight brokers are changing the transportation industry? Faced with unique legal challenges, efforts to digitize brokering have been expanding in the New World marriage of tech and transportation. Our laws are lagging, and remnants of the direct shipper-to-carrier system remain in the statutes and regulations, updated mostly by MAP-21. What distinguishes digital freight brokers from the rest? Is the offering of automated ways to connect shippers and carriers closer to a transportation network services provider than a broker, and does this help to further limit liability? With all the automation, how are brokers providing safeguards to vet carriers and protect shippers? Hear from industry leadership about advances in technology and safeguards, the forefront legal issues, and discussions on benefits and pitfalls of digital freight brokering.

While the Founding Fathers did not have the benefit of air travel in their day, they certainly paved the way for the future of air travel. In this spirit, we encourage you to bring your pen and quill and join us as we discuss the Top 10 issues to look for when buying, selling, or leasing an airplane. Learn the tips and tricks used by industry leaders to ensure your transaction is as smooth as your air travel.

- Just as our Founding Fathers understood that the country they founded would grow and change over time, in the transportation and logistics industry, carriers and third-party logistics providers grow organically or through acquisition. As owners of transportation companies pursue their own happiness, both organic growth and acquisition have their benefits, but if done correctly, acquisitions can quickly deliver a competitive advantage and significant benefits to shareholders and investors. This session will include a strategic overview and discussion of acquisitions and will then drill down into the nuts and bolts of what lawyers need to do when putting together a deal.
